When I load my data in an sqlite DB that has temporary tables in it, the columns get named by their old names (i.e. in the sqlite db, the table "car" has the columns "year" and "make"). I know how to override the names, but when I do so, the foreign-key constraints fail. So here's the problem: The following code loads the DB "car": with sqlite3.connect("car.db") as connection: try: with sqlite3.connect("temp.db") as temp: print("table_exist? {}".format(sqlite3.tables(connection).tables)) print("table_exist? {}".format(sqlite3.tables(temp.connection).tables)) # this returns True and False sqlite3.cursor(connection).execute("SELECT * FROM car") # this returns True sqlite3.cursor(temp.connection).execute("SELECT * FROM car") except sqlite3.Error as error: print(error) finally: sqlite3.connect("temp.db") # closing the connection to the temp table f678ea9f9e
